The museum can digitally manipulate a scanned image to remove or soften rips, stains, losses, notations, etc., or to enhance a faded or darkened area. Such manipulations are primarily for damage incurred AFTER the print was made. The museum will NOT alter an image to change the photographer's intent (e.g., remove phone lines) or remove deliberate historic damage (e.g., a defaced face). The museum reserves the right to deny a request for digital manipulation if it believes such action will alter the integral historical accuracy of the image and the information that it presents. Price per image.
